In a world of constant change and rapid evolution, the long-term sustainability of our businesses and projects can be a complex task. To achieve this it is necessary to develop flexible, creative and innovative strategies that serve as a bridge to the new business of the XXI century. It is for this reason that we need a new culture based on authentic communication, confidence and enjoyment. And a team of people who really know how to work together, make commitments and share responsibilities. Dragon Dreaming is the methodology that helps us achieve this. This is a tool to get companies to build resilient and inspiring projects. Thus, Dragon Dreaming can be applied to various purposes, both for undertaking a project, the creation of new products or services and the implementation of structural changes and vision within an organization. Dragon Dreaming takes us out of our comfort zone to reach our maximum creativity, adopting at the same time a culture of win-win and authentic communication. Dragon Dreaming works with a four-stage process: dream, plan, do and celebrate; 12 different phases and more than 60 tools. Using these tools in your organization, the resilience and adaptability to changes will increase and a greater cohesion among its stakeholders will be achieved, because the process of creation and realization of projects will be done in an enjoyable and inclusive way.

John Croft is the co-creator and leading advocate of Dragon Dreaming worldwide. Thousands of people and organizations from over 30 countries have participated in our workshops and consultancies and are applying it in their projects; including:

Dragon Dreaming has been used by the following companies

- AuthentiCities: creating a different way to travel. It offers the traveller an unforgettable experience while helping locals to make their city a better place.

- Samastah: a platform with comprehensive tools & solutions to find balance and inner happiness that ease the achievement of personal and professional goals.

- Once in a LifeTime Events: Helping event producers to create transformative events.

- The Seed: a creative cooperative network based in the area of brand communication.

- Maia Maia: is a community alternative currency system that seeks to reduce carbon emissions in Perth, Western Australia.
Let’s Do It: International movement that in 2012 brought together on one day 270 thousand volunteers (15 percent of the Slovenia’s population) to clean up trash. It is now present in 100 countries with over 10 million participants.

Ecodigma: accompanying organizations in their transformation towards sustainability through strategic design and management of organizational change through management innovation.

Dragon Dreaming is a holistic approach that combines the living systems theory and deep ecology with traditional methods of project management, in addition to the ancestral wisdom of indigenous Australians. This methodology is the result of work over 25 years that has evolved thanks to the contribution of hundreds of thinkers, educators and agents of change such as Gandhi, Paolo Freire, Jung, Joanna Macy, Scott Peck, Arnold Mindell, Rosenberg etc ...

The principles of Dragon Dreaming

Supporting personal growth
While we carry out the project, we discover new aspects of ourselves and acquire new skills. We deepen our contact with the world and those around us.

Encourage team building and communities
Trust and cooperation in the team grow from the experience, appreciating the views of each and every person looking to find your ideal location within the project. We work to build relationships of genuine communication “win-win”

To serve the planet
We identify the needs of people and the planet. We find meaning and significance in our actions through feedback to our environment. We put ourselves at the service of the whole and we encourage diversity, creativity and liveliness, developing sustainable projects that ensure the future of generations to come.

• In addition, clearly identifies communication and structural failures.

• Integrates individual’s enjoyment and self-fulfillment as a key element of success.
The four stages of Dragon Dreaming
These are the four phases and four different types of personalities needed for the projects come true.

Dreaming: Every project starts with a dream to be shared with others so that it can be realized. This is why Dragon Dreaming proposed at this stage, that the dream of the individual dies to be reborn as a collective dream, becoming much more powerful. Here we work on creating the "dream team" and tools like circle of dreams and charismatic communication.

Planning: At this stage we proceed to consider alternatives, not only from the perspective of the team that is making the dream, but also those who resist or do not believe in the project. In this phase we also create a strategy that includes a schedule of tasks, timing and budget, and a prototype with short feedback circles that allow us to be learning experience as quickly as possible.

Doing: It's time to implement. The project comes out and begins to manage. We make changes to the planning, timing and costs. But the bigger question is, are we doing our original dream? We will monitor our progress till the end of the game board, or Karrabyrdt, which is the tool for project design drawn from Aboriginal Culture and dating back more than 5,000 years ago.

Celebrate: This phase is normally not included in conventional project management, but it is where we learn to create and work together to build community, to keep the dream alive and motivation. It helps to keep stress on the sidelines, to realize what we have learned and the new skills that we have acquired.

Learning and implementing Dragon Dreaming’s methodology is easy, although it will only be through commitment and perseverance that the desired changes will be achieved. We live in a society with deep-rooted beliefs and this is why it takes time, dedication and courage in order to create a new collaborative culture of win-win. It is in this new culture, the individual and the team, go on to develop their true potential and re-connect with the world, to be the real engines of change.

Reviews from Dragon Dreaming workshop’s participants in Spain, from November 2013 to March 2014:

What did you like the most about the workshop?

"The simplicity and practicality of Dragon Dreaming."

"The change of consciousness that works in DD from the various tools. I realize how it worked, while it offered possibilities and guides to work from a more aware location."

"Group dynamics, and discover a planning methodology that takes into account many more aspects, making it more complete."

"The group dynamics of collective intelligence, now I have even more confidence in these processes."

"That is practical and applicable to any project, not only to the business."

"The methodology is extremely interesting and attractive. I have worked with various tools related to the design of projects and Dragon Dreaming seems very inclusive because it takes into account the individuals and the collective sense."

"Openness, honesty, humility and generosity of the facilitators. They have shared from the heart, reason and from his experience."
